reception at Delmonico's on the afternoon of Saturday, December 2, will serve to open the sea-son for the Wednesday cotillons or dances of the resident Southern Society. On the following Tuesday evening. December 5, the first dance will be sen, which, with those on January 3 and 24 and e on February 14 (St. Valentine's Day), will conrute the season's entertainments for this association. A sweeping reduction in numbers, instituted by the governors and made necessary by the rapid growth of the organization, has been effected, so that now the society finds Delimonico's baliroom better adapted to its needs than is Sherry's, where last season's dances were heid. The invitations proclaim George H. Sullivan president and Heth Lorion secretary and treasurer, while among the well known names of the patrons are those of Hugh S. Thompson, Dr. Oliver Livingston Jones, William L. Trenholm and General Roc. Mrs. Algernon Sydney Sullivan heads the list of patronesses followed by Mrs. Trenholm, Mrs. Samuel Spencer, Mrs. Oliver Livingston Jones, Mrs. John Furling Lawrence, Mrs. John N. Boothby and others.

The Colonial Dames of America held their November conference, which was followed by a tea, on Tuesday at the home of Miss Julia Livingston Delafield, No. 475 Fifth-ave.

Senator Thurston's bride is a highly gifted young soman, whose mother was Miss Leadora Finlay-ton, of the well known Southern family of that hame. Her father, Major William J. Purman, entered the Army at the breaking out of the Civil War, and served with distinction under Generals Meigs, Crane. Sprague and Meade. He was a leading member of the Constitutional Convention of Florida, and in Reconstruction days was elected to Congress from that State.

PARTIAL RECOUNT FOR M'KNIGHT.

The contest for Assembly in the IId District of Queens between Harvey Stewart McKnight, Republican, and Cyrus Gale, Democrat, came before Supreme Court Justice Garretson in Long Island City Yesetrday. Gale lost two votes, and his majority is how 16. Envelopes from the Third and Sixth districts of the Third Ward and from the First, Third and Fourth districts of the Fourth Ward, supposed to contain rejected ballots, were empty. The Court ordered the ballot boxes in those districts opened and a recount made. Mr. McKnight expects to cut down Gale's majority through the recount, and is counting on the soldler vote to aid him in securing the seat in the Assembly from the district.

AMUSEMENT NOTES.

Miss Maude Lillian Berri will sing the title part in "Lucia di Lammermoor" at the American Thea-tre to-morrow night, in place of Miss Grace Golden.

The popularity of the buriesques presented at Weber & Field's Music Hall is no less marked than it has been in previous seasons. The present offerings, "The Whirl-legg" and "The Other Way," offer the usual opportunities to the company, which as is customary, is largely composed of favorite actors.

A succession of large audiences has viewed the Proceedings at the Manhattan Theatre within the last week. The musical farce, "Papa's Wife," is now presented there by a company headed by Miss Anna Held and Charles A. Bigelow. The play has a abundance of music by Reginald De Koven

> MANY POLITICIANS EXPECTED TO ATTEND THE CONFERENCE IN THIS CITY ON WEDNES-DAY-THE GOVERNOR AND THE

CONSTABULARY BILL.

Comparatively few Republican politicians were at the headquarters of the Republican State Committee in the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday. Several of the members of the Legislature who were at the headquarters on Friday went to their homes up the State yesterday. More members of the Legislature are expected to be at the headquarters this week. Governor Roosevelt's conference with Senator Platt and other leaders on Wednesday is expected to attract a number of the politicians.

Speaking yesterday of the visit of State Senators Coggeshall and Wilcox, Chairman Odell said that he was glad to see and talk with them. "I think," he added, "that they will be found acting with their party at the next session of the Legislature."

Mr. Odell said there was no truth in a report that the Governor had declared himself opposed to a State constabulary bill. "In a conversation which the Governor had on Thursday with me," Mr. Odell continued, "he did not say anything particular about the bill. The fact is that there has been no decision on the subject by the leaders, and there will be no decision until the Governor and the party leaders have a consultation. Nobody knows yet if the Con-stabulary bill will be introduced or if some other police bill will be favored."

As to the talk about Assemblyman Fallows being appointed chairman of the Assembly Committee on Cities, Mr. Odell said: "I have a high opinion of Mr. Fallows, and he is in line for the place, but no announcement on that subject will be made until Speaker Nixon comes down here and makes up his committees." Mr. Odell yesterday completed a tabulation of the vote for Assemblyman in all the districts of the State, and ascertained that the Republicans had carried the State with a majority of about 30,000, according to his figures. Governor Roosevelt's plurality last year was about 17,000, "The vote this year," Mr. Odell said, "indicates increased confidence of the people throughout the State in the Republican organization. I knew we had a good majority, but until the tabulation was completed. I had no idea that the figures would reach 30,000. We gained everywhere except in New-York County."

MR. HOBART GROWING WEAKER.

HE IS MOVED ABOUT WITH MORE EFFORT THAN A FEW DAYS AGO.

Paterson, N. J., Nov. 18 (Special) .- No change in he condition of Vice-President Hobart was reported to-day. He slept fairly well during the night and partook of solid nourishment at three meals to-day. It is believed that Mr. Hobart is again growing weaker, although but little change is apparent as far as general appearance is concerned. It re-quires more effort to remove him from the bed to the window than it did a few days ago.

THE DRAMA-MUSIC.

HENRY IRVING'S FAREWELL NIGHT. The engagement of Henry Irving and Ellen Terry at the Knickerbocker Theatre was ended last night, with a performance of "The Bells" and "Nance Oldfield,"-which delighted a multitude of spectators,-and these eminent leaders of the stage will be seen here no more until next spring, when they will -during two weeks beginning on March 12-give farewell representations and so will take leave of America. The three weeks of their stay have been devoted to "Robesplerre," "The Merchant of Venice," "The Bells," "The Amber Heart," "Nance Oldfield" and "Waterloo." Henry Irving has been seen as Robespierre, Shylock, Mathias, and Brew-ster. Ellen Terry has been seen as Clarice de Malucon, Portia, Elialine, and Mrs. Oidfield. The theatre has been crowded at every performance. and the public has signified its enjoyment by copious applause. The gain of the commu-nity has been diversified and rich. The spirit and meaning of the French olution have been illustrated and enf and Robespierre,-to most people a shadowy and fading name,-has been summoned out of the past and has been made a living reality. Poetic ideals, of the first order, have been made actual. In the course of the performance of "The Bells" Henry Irving was ing and hailing him with cheers. He acted Mathias in this character, investing it with romance, making singular fascination of awe and terror. The intelfeeling, the impartment of a sense of haunting horror, the portraiture of a strong will antagonizing an accusing conscience, the lovely tenderness of the father toward the daughter (particularly as denoted in the lower tones of his pathetic voice), surely can never have had a more decisive After the third curtain the actor made a brief but earnest, tender and graceful speech of farewell. The night was closed with Ellen Terry' frolicsome presentment of Nance Oldfield,—so that the last object left in remembrance might be a thing of beauty. So closes one of the brightest chapters in the stage experience of this capital.

THE FIRST PHILHARMONIC CONCERT-PETSCHNIKOFF.

The Philharmonic Society probably never began a season more auspiciously than last night, when it opened its fifty-eighth series of concerts in Carnegie Hall. Everything was favorable; the audience, in numbers and character (though this is an invariable factor at Philharmonic concerts); the spirit pervading the concert room at the beginning; its beautiful growth into the heartlest enthusiasm, which found vent finally in a demand for a repetition or an additional piece-very unusual at Philharmonic concerts; the responsiveness of the band to Mr. Paur's wishes; and Mr. Paur's own zeal and intelligence in the interpretation of the numbers on the programme; the marvellous genius disclosed by solo performer-all things worked together to bring about as successful a musical meeting as fails to the lot of a recorder to set down in a decade. The programme made no appeal on the score of novelty, consisting as it did of pieces long familiar to amateurs, so that the favor with which it was received was a tribute to the performance. And it was deserved. The Philharmonic band has seldom developed so fine and virile a tone, or played with precision and obedience to the conductor's beat, as last night. Sticklers for the highest perfection in orchestral playing could only regret the existence of that impure intonation in the woodwind which has been bewailed so long and so vainly. How that is to be remedied no one seems willing or able to say.

The solo performer of the evening was the Russian violinist, Petschnikoff. No virtuoso has ever set himself a severer task than he, either to introduce himself to the New-York public or to retain its favor once gained; and no virtuoso, for twenty years, at least, has won a more complete triumph. figure from the third of Bach's sonatas for violin This was his set task; but the audien sisted on more, and after the fugue he played the familiar gavotte from the E major partita by the same composer. The sonata is not wholly unknown here, but it cannot be said to have made its way into the popular heart. Miss Maud Powell, with that zeal characteristic of her, introduced us to its first movement as long ago as 1888, when Brodsky, its real godfather, and Hahn were working under many disadvantages to make it known in Europe Its fate has been like that of Beethoven's concerto dreaded, feared and even despised at the beginning and later coming into the recognition which it deserved. It has not yet reached the acme of popularity, but Mr. Petschnikoff is likely to help it along most puissantly if he plays it always as he did last night. The annotated programme referred to the fact that on its first performance in Vienna it was called "ill smelling music" by Dr. Hanslick. The fact might have been forgotten before this if Tschaikowsky had not himself kept it alive in one of his magazine articles. In the article which makes up a chapter in a book of his writings published recently, he tells of the gratitude chalenged by Mr. Brodsky for rescuing his concerto from the oblivion to which Mr. Auer, to whom i was dedicated, seemed willing to consign it. Brodsky had taken up the stone rejected by Auer and made it the head of the corner in his repertoire. He began his self-imposed task to make its beauty known in Vienna, and there ran against the Hanslickian obstacle. What the doughty opponent of Wagner and champion of Brahms wrote about the concerto is just as interesting now, after the peopie have learned to admire Tschaikowsky's music re and more with each hearing, as it was then; apology for reproducing it here in the revised form prepared by Hanslick for publication between binders' boards. Said he in a review of a Vienna Philharmonic Society concert in 1881:

It was ill-advised in the violin virtuoso. Mr. Brodsky to present himself to the Vienna public for the first time with this composition. The Russian composer Tschalkowsky is certainly not a talent of the ordinary kind, but a talent that is forced, that seeks to be thought a genius, that produces without judgment and without taste. The works with which we have been made acquainted (with the possible exception of the fluent and piquant quartet in D major) have offered a singular mixture of originality and crudity, of happy con-(with the possible exception of the fluent and piquant quartet in D major have offered a singular mixture of originality and crudity, of happy conceits and hopeless over-refinements. So also his newest, long and pretentious violin concerto. For a time it moves along orderly, musically and not without esprit, but soon rudeness gains we upper hand and maintains it to the end of the first movement. The violin is not piayed, it is dragged about by the hair, ripped up the back, beaten black and blue. Whether it is at all possible to execute these horrific difficulties cleanly I do not know; but I do know that in trying to do so Mr. Brodsky crudified us no less than himself. The adagic, with its gentle Slavic melancholy almost reconciles, almost wins us, but at the supreme moment it breaks off to make way for a finale which transports us into the brutal, sorrowful gavety of a Russian church festival. We see nothing but ugly, vulgar faces, hear rude oaths and smell fusil oil. Friedrich Vischer once while discussing lascivious drawings said there were pictures "whose stench might be seen." Tschalkowsky's violin concerto brings the question to our mind for the first time whether or not there is music whose stench can be heard.

If there is any doubt in Dr. Hansilck's mind as

If there is any doubt in Dr. Hanslick's mind as whether or not Tschalkowsky's concerto can be played "cleanly," that is, in tune and with perfect technique, he should hear Petschnikoff play it as he played it last night. A marvel of pure intonation, crisp, clear, precise reading of the text-it was that he gave the work, coupled with a dash and a richness of tone that have not been surpassed here in decades. The man is an artist of the kind that we have the privilege of welcoming only twice or thrice in a generation; and with instrumental music running into hopeless technical virtuosity on all sides there is no need to despair so long as there remain such musicianly virtuosi as Mr.

Flake had a good record in the Army, but after a few years' service he married and then resigned in order to go into the furniture business with his father-in-law in Detroit. In 1898, he went to Johannesburg, and, failing to catch on there, prospected in Buluwayo, and from there went to Rhodesia. While he was in the latter country a young American, who was under age, enlisted in the horse battalion of Her Majesty's troops, but after enlistment was assigned to the foot. This the young fellow refused to accept and also declined to domilitary duty in Rhodesia. He was put under arrest, and Blake, being a West Point graduate and ex-officer of the United States Army, was requested to defend him. This he did, and in the trial that followed put up a masterly defence and, in fact, made a plaything of the English judge advocate, and, while his client was convicted of disobedience of orders, it was felt that Blake had you a moral class of 1879. He was appointed from Arkansas. cictory. This and some other experiences disgusted him, and as a matter of pique he prospected the gold fields of Rhodesia and then wrote a series of very able articles concerning them, which appeared in a number of the leading papers of London. He formed a dislike for the English at this time, which made it easy and natural for him to enter the Boer service. I have just returned from London, where I heard that Blake received credit for most of the successful strategical moves of General Joubert's army."

In the earlier years of the century people maintained country places as they do now, but they were nearer. Journeys of twenty miles in those days were as difficult and more so than journeys of ten times that length to-day, and when the method of travel was astride a horse, by public road coach or private conveyance, our forebears were contented to go not very far afield when establishing their summer homes. Towesdale which although it advantages of boating and bathing, and good fishing was afforded by it as well. Twenty miles was a good stretch of territory to cover in a day prior to the advent of railroads, and the early Philadelphian who had a summer home at Towesdale was in the habit of making an early start in order to reach his destination comfortably and with his Lares and Penates upon the same day. In present times you run in from Towesdale in less than an hour on the slow trains, while by the expresses the time consumed may be counted by minutes. Up to within a short time ago the whole of the suburban traffic lay within the control of the railroads, which did everything in their power to foster the growth of the rural population along their lines. To-day the method of ingress to and egress from the city has largely changed. While our railroad suburban-urban traffic still remains very large, it has been greatly cut into by the trolley systems. When you can ride from Germantown to any point in Philadelphia at a cost of 5 cents (if money is an object to you), you are extremely unlikely to pay the increased price charged by the steam railroads. On this account the roads have lost, and the growth in the use of bicycles has also been a factor in the reduction of their suburban earnings, which nevertheless are still a very important portion of their annual receipts."

The interest in cricket matches, particularly international ones, is intense there and is not confined to the club members by any means. The entire population follows the game closely and are up in its fine points. You see small boys playing away at it incyacath lots there the same as you see them playing at baseball in other places. An international cricket match is a very pretty sight. A crowd of people to my mind is always interesting, and an international cricket match is always sure to pull together an enormous crowd with us. The rows of four-in-hand conches, the packed grandstands and bleachers and the crowds waiking up and down, when coupled with the attractive physical aspects of the beautiful country clubs where the matches are played make it always a beautiful and artistic spectacle. Philadelphia abounds in country and cricket clubs, and teams from the different clubs play with each other in off years. There are Manhelm, the cricket club at Germantown, the Merion Cricket Club and a number of others scattered about the suburbs.

BAWLING I. COTTENET'S HORSE FALLS ON HIM AND HE HAS CONCUSSION OF THE BRAIN-C. ALBERT STEVENS HURT.

Hempstead, N. Y., Nov. 18.-Rawlins L. Cottenet and C. Albert Stevens, who are well known in society, were thrown while following the hounds over the Meadow Brook Hunt Club course to-day and severely injured.

Rawlins L. Cottenet, who is thirty-five years old, was mounted on his horse Red Baron. While attempting a fence the horse struck the top rall, turned over and fell on his rider, pinning him down. Colonel Clinch Smith and Robert L. Stevens went to Mr. Cottenet's assistance. They found him unconscious. The injured man was sent in a trap to his mother's house, in Wheatley, and Dr. Valentine Mott found that Mr. Cottenet had sustained a concussion of the brain, injuries to his back and internal injuries. Cottenet's brother was killed nine years ago while hunting.

C. Albert Stevens's horse stumbled, throwing his rider violently. Mr. Stevens was badly cut about the head and his right shoulder was sprained. Mrs. Stevens took him home to their untry seat, in Westbury, in a trap.

LAWYER ARRAIGNED FOR GRAND LARCENY Guy C. Walters, the lawyer, of Far Rockaway, was arraigned before County Judge Moore in Long Island City yesterday, on an indictment charging him with grand larceny. He was represented by Edward Jackson, of Wantagh. Walters pleaded not guilty, and was held in $2,500 bail for trial. He was locked up. It is charged that on or about May 10. 1898, George Kaiser retained Walters to secure another mortgage to take the place of the one on his property, as it was coming due. Kaiser gave him a check for $1.200, and first learned that the first mortgage had not been paid by Walters after it became due. He found that there were two mortgages on his property.

FUNERAL OF T. W. HYDE. Bath. Me., Nov. 18 .- General business in the city of Bath was neglected this afternoon, when thousands of citizens and large delegations from other sections of the State assembled at the Sweden-borgian Church, where the funeral of General Thomas W. Hyde was held. All day Bath was a city of mourning, black draperies were visible upon every hand, flags floated at half-mast, and at intervals the church bells were tolled. The funeral service was read by the Rev. George H. Dole at 2.30 o'clock, before an immense congregation. The body was escorted from Elmhurst, the Hyde homestead, to the church and thence to the grave by a procession made up of police, employes of the Bath Iron Works, Grand Army of the Republic, Naval Veterans and citizens. The burial was at Oak Grove Cemetery, where a brief military service was held. Thomas W. Hyde was held. All day Bath was a

A mistress who had just engaged a new c made a tour of inspection after she had kept a week and found a policeman locked up in pantry. "How did this man get here?" asked pantry. "How did this man get here: "assed the lady, severely.

SIR HENRY COMING BACK.

END OF THE IRVING-TERRY ENGAGEMENT -ANOTHER IN THE SPRING.

The three weeks' engagement of Sir Henry Irving and Miss Ellen Terry at the Knickerbocker The atre ended last night. Sir Henry appeared in "The Bells" and Miss Terry in "Nance Oldfield." There was a crowded house, and the enthusiasm was military school previous to his go- great. After the last act of "The Bells" Sir Henry made a brief speech, in which he announced that he and his company would return for a fortnight in They will then repeat the same plays which they have been giving in the course of the engagement just ended. Sir Henry's speech was Ladies and Gentlemen: It is quite impossible for me to thank you as I would for the greeting which you have given us. I should be less grateful and happy if I could say how much. I very well remember how, on a night sixteen years ago, I appeared before you in the same play just finished. Many times I have appeared in it since then, and I speak for Miss Terry, who has always received from you nothing but gracious courtesy and a most beautiful hospitality, and, if I may say so, a loving welcome—a welcome which has given us new hopes and new aspirations. I am proud to see that in America we have another home. It is delightful to me, ladies and gentlemen, to say now that we shall be able to offer a fortnight's engagement, to begin on March 12, and, remembering you as such good friends. I can only hope that you will remember us as we shall you. I wish to thank the gentlemen of the press for their sympathetic and sometimes eloquent appreciation of our work, and also Mr. Charles Frohres and his star for the many courtesies which have made our stay happy. I will not detain you longer. Miss Terry is to I present one of her delightful creations, and, thanking you, ladies and gentlemen, for myself and Miss Terry, and the members of the company, I will bid you good night.
